

Hot New Equipment: Sneak Peek 2007

TaylorMade r7 TP irons:
The Best of Both Worlds

GOLF

TIPS

The Game's Most In-Depth Instruction & Equipment Magazine

Shatter Your Scoring Barriers!

Pros Do It...Now You Can Too!

Save More Pars!
From Under 100 Yards

+ Wake Up Your Game!
With Season-Starting Tips

FEB./MAR. 2007

DISPLAY UNTIL MARCH 6, 2007

$4.99US $6.99CAN

03>

www.golftipsmag.com

By Steve Pike

FOCUS On

GolfPac Travel

Trilogy Golf Course at La Quinta in Palm Desert, Calif., is just one of many destinations GolfPac Travel serves. The Gary Panks design hosted the 2006 LG Skins Game.

One-stop shopping has become a staple of life these days. As the demands on people's time increase, the need to take care of as much as possible in a timely, convenient manner is paramount, whether one is shopping for groceries, shoes, cars or even golf vacations.

Let's concentrate on the latter. As one of the industry's leading providers of golf vacations since 1975, Golfpac has sent more than 550,000 golfers to destinations from Arizona's desert to Spain's Costa del Sol and dozens of destinations in between, including the Sandhills of North Carolina, the Old Course at St. Andrews, Scotland, and the burgeoning market in the Dominican Republic. All of these destinations and more are previewed in Golfpac Travel's newly-revamped Website, www.golfpactravel.com, which features new tools to help make getting started on a trip easier than ever.

For example, the Golfpac site contains the company's Vacation Finder, a sign-up box for an online newsletter as well as an offer for its free 2006-2007 Golf Travel Guide brochure.

Want information on Arnold Palmer's Bay Hill Club in Orlando or Donald Ross's masterpiece Pinehurst No. 2 in North Carolina? Golfpac's site has the 411. How about the TPC Stadium Course at PGA West in La Quinta, Calif., or Robert Trent Jones' legendary Gold Course at Colonial Williamsburg? Golfpac has all one needs to know about those courses and where to stay, as well as a variety of stay-and-play packages that can fit almost any budget and golf handicap.

A Group Leader, in Golfpac vernacular, is the main man (or woman) in a group of golfers (say four or eight persons) who's primarily responsible for coordinating a golf trip with a Golfpac travel professional. Golfpac employs 26 travel professionals, each of whom are experts in helping prepare a one-night golf getaway or a six-night "trip of a lifetime" experience. "Most of the guys [who work with us] play golf and have been with us for years, so we have a wealth of knowledge," says Hamilton. "We have people visiting golf courses and hotels a couple times per year. They travel before and after the season, negotiate rates and check out the quality of the product."

And in case you meet a Golfpac travel professional, check for a Rolex watch. Hamilton gives a Rolex to each employee who has been with the company for at least 10 years. So far,

"We consider ourselves the gold standard of the golf travel industry as far as the service we provide and the technology we provide our customers," says Golfpac Travel President, Jeff Hamilton. Hamilton and a group of partners acquired Golfpac Travel, based in Orlando, in 1986 and over the past 20-plus years, have turned the business from $2 million in annual sales to more than $20 million in annual sales. "We're always being forced to step up to the plate and have innovative tools on the Website that others don't have in order to make the job of the Group Leader easier," says Hamilton. "We try to be as minimally invasive to the customer as we possibly can until he wants to provide us with information or wants us to provide a service. From that point, we build on the relationship and follow up."

Gold Canyon Golf Resort, Gold Canyon, Ariz.

Grayhawk Golf Club, Scottsdale, Ariz.

“We’re trying to educate people, it’s important to have a good product”

